Solving Academic and Behavior Problems: Coaches' Training

"In order to help struggling learners you have to know why they are struggling."
- Dr. Mel Levine

This seminar will help you...

Practice strategies for digging below symptoms to the causes of student problems.

Learn to write clear goals and find simple ways to measure them.

Turn parents and students into willing participants in solving problems.

Hold team meetings that strengthen tier one instruction.

Generate action plans at every team meeting.

Agendas:

Continental breakfast at 8:00 daily

Days One & Two

8:30 – 4:00

Basics of coaching

- * How to ask the right questions and be a good listener
- * How to turn meetings into productive conversations that teachers value
 - * Learn simple ways to collect and analyze data
 - * Use new tools that allow you to uncover strengths to build on as well as root causes of academic and social-emotional problems

Days Three & Four

8:30 – 4:00

Advanced coaching practice

- * How to analyze and address executive functioning skills that influence behaviors like focusing, organization, memory and impulse control problems
- * Use case studies to practice identifying root causes, setting DATA goals and writing action plans

Teams should bring real case studies with them including data about the severity of the students' problems, i.e., oral reading fluency scores, digits per minute counts, numbers of disruptions per class period, frequency of missing assignments, etc.

Who should attend?

 Administrators, supervisors, counselors, psychologists, special and general education teachers.

Most schools find it helpful to send teams made up of administrators, special ed. and general ed. teachers.
